The BILL COLLECTOR

It happened.
It struck home!

After twenty-four years of steady
work, the termination ax fell November 18.
Saw it coming, yet, when it did,
the blow was castrating.

Add another figure to the growing rolls of the disengaged.
Seven/eight million!

Inflation/recession/the crunch -- euphemisms for depression.

The swelling lines at the unemployment insurance offices
across the land mirrors the story/
the truth.
The queuers-- personally observed,
are people mostly of the Third World, among them Asians.
Half of the jobless standees are women.

Idle hands, idle hours.
Stagnation/emotional pollution/
mind blowing.
The experience is frightening;
oftentimes humiliating.

What happens when unemployment benefits cease?
Welfare?
The outlook is chilling.

Recently met an astute friend, who holds a responsible position in the financial world.
His discerning remark was:
"Cheer up. The worst is yet to come!"
